"Consumer Class Actions in Defective Plumbing Products and How They Affect Subrogation Rights"

Tuesday, February 9, 2016– 1 p.m. EST

When plumbing products have manufacturing defects, water losses are inevitable. Such losses affect the insured and uninsured alike, and consumer class action suits often are initiated against the manufacturer. Frequently, the consumer attorneys – along with the product defense attorneys – reach resolution of these class action suits that affect subrogation rights. This presentation will discuss the issues that arise from class litigation of plumbing products: class definitions, the claims processes and the release language. We will touch on the basics of class action procedure, since many subrogation professionals do not routinely get involved in class action litigation. This will be a presentation of issues and options available to the NASP members, and will not advocate a position or course of action.

Craig Simon is managing partner of Berger Kahn and has been named a Top 100 Attorney by the California Daily Journal. He is National Subrogation Counsel to Farmers, which is an outside counsel position. Craig lectured to various trade groups and organizations, including at NASP annual conferences.

Christopher Ballard is the Director of Subrogation for Farmers Insurance Group of Companies, overseeing subrogation activities nationwide. Chris has oversight for property and auto and oversees all subrogation initiatives for Farmers. Chris has lectured at NASP annual conferences.
